

This is right up there with the banjo joke...

I guess I should explain to the non-musicians that may read these little starter pieces that musicians have jokes about every instrument... banjos, accordions, bagpipes, etc. take a lot of the brunt of these though.

My dear Father was a very good accordion player and actually started me out on that instrument. He bought me a smaller “piano accordion” but for an 8 year old it was pretty heavy. He’d give me the money to go to my lessons (including bus fare) as it was about 20 blocks from my home to “Accordiana College”.

I went a few times and completely lost interest so I would take the bus a little further to a theatre and use the lesson money to see a show and have some popcorn and take the bus home. I have a brother 3 years younger than me and I would give him 25¢ to “toodle” on my accordion so my Dad would think I was practicing... meanwhile down the street a teenager named Murray had a set of drums and would let me watch him practice.

My Dad found out and ended up buying me a set of WFL drums (old name for Ludwig) and put me with the best drum teacher (Lynn Wallace) in the top music store in my home town of Edmonton... Harmony Kids.

By the time I was 12, I was playing in my Dad's band and getting paid and I have been paid ever since and that's coming up to 66 years this summer... and still going and loving every minute playing with the great guys I play with in a great club... I'm the luckiest guy anywhere!

Now I have got a "roadie" as I went through some health issues and I only play once a week to the greatest bunch of people that are "our" audience... how lucky can a guy get?

My goal now is to be the oldest performing drummer on Earth... right here in our beautiful paradise by the lake.
